ABSTRACT

This document contains output from a computerized bibliographic database. This issue is divided into four parts. Part I consists of titles that address various aspects of population education and is arranged by country in the first section, and general materials in the second section. Part II presents knowledge base information and consists of titles that address the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. The major multidisciplinary topics covered include documentation; environment and environmental education; fertility and family planning; reproductive health; adolescent reproductive and sexual health; health; HIV/AIDS; information and communication; migration, urbanization and human settlement; population and sustainable development; demography; gender equality, equity, and empowerment of women; and research and evaluation. Part III consists of titles of various kinds of audio-visual and IEC aids (films, slides, charts, kits, and videotapes) that address aspects of both knowledge base and population education. Part IV contains the appendices which consist of lists of publishers and sources, a subject index, and a geographical index. (SAH)

INTRODUCTION

This issue of the Population Education Accessions List is an output from our computerized bibliographic data base using the Micro CDS/ISIS system. The Accessions List is being generated three times a year in three formats: printed format, diskette format, and via e-mail. In addition, it can be viewed on our web site: http://www.unescobkk.org/infores/rechpec

The list categorizes the entries into three parts:

Part I - Population Education consists of titles dealing with various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second section.

Part II - Knowledge Base Information consists of titles that deal with the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics:

1. Documentation
2. Environment and environmental education
3. Fertility and family planning
4. Reproductive health
5. Adolescent reproductive and sexual health
6. Health
7. HIV/AIDS
8. Information and communication
9. Migration, urbanization and human settlement
10. Population and sustainable development
11. Demography
12. Gender equality, equity and empowerment of women
13. Research and evaluation

Part III - Audio-visual and IEC materials consist of titles of various kinds of audio-visual and IEC aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) dealing with both knowledge base and population education aspects.

Part IV - Appendices consist of List of Publishers and Sources, Subject Index, Author Index, and Geographical Index.

Each entry or title is given a running number and bibliographical references that include: (i) either the author or corporate author; (ii) title; (iii) imprint; (iv) collation; (v) subject key words; (vi) country key words; and (vii) classification number. In addition to these, a source code is also given. The source code is an abbreviation of the name of the organization where a particular title can be acquired. For the complete names and addresses of the source codes, kindly consult the List of Publishers and Sources given in the Appendices.

Cain, Richard H.; Daponte, Beth Osborne.
Effects of El Salvador's population education program on rural youth and their future fertility. S.l.: s.n., 1999. 30 p.

This study explores how El Salvador's population education programme, which is designed by Salvadorans from the Salvadoran Ministry of Education with the assistance of a UNESCO consultant from Colombia, is affecting rural Salvadoran students. The effects of this programme are explored in two analyses, for which data is collected in June, July and August 1996. The first analysis assesses what likely impact the programme will have on future fertility levels in rural El Salvador. The second analysis explores how rural Salvadoran primary school students believe population education is affecting, and will affect their lives.

Booklet 1: demographic profile. Bangkok: UNESCO PROAP, 1999. 19 p. (Communication and advocacy strategies: adolescent reproductive and sexual health; series one)

Series one covers Bangladesh, Iran, Malaysia, Mongolia, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand

This booklet describes the adolescent population of the seven countries in terms of their demographic profile such as their population size, age of marriage, educational attainment, employment, and health, among others. This is followed by an overall picture of the reproductive and sexual health characteristics of the adolescents through their fertility practices, teen pregnancy/childbearing abortion, HIV/AIDS and STDs, family planning and contraception. The last part synthesizes the different knowledge, attitude and practice (KAP) surveys dealing with the youth's sexual behaviour, knowledge, attitude and behaviour on sexuality, age at first intercourse, and incidence of pre-marital sexual activity. Booklet One thus sets the context, i.e. the problem that the adolescents face for which the succeeding two booklets address their focus on.

Booklet 2: advocacy and IEC programmes and strategies. Bangkok: UNESCO PROAP, 1999. 31 p. (Communication and advocacy strategies: adolescent reproductive and sexual health; series one)

This booklet describes the seven countries' responses to address the problems faced by adolescents by showing the various programmes and activities that the countries are carrying out. Each of the programme included describes the target audiences reached, the scope, type of organizations involved, their objectives, strategies used, outputs or results of such programmes and impact. After describing the overall programme details, this booklet zeroes in on the advocacy and IEC strategies which have been used. The strategies are analysed in terms of their types and approach, target audiences, objectives, messages or contents, communication media or vehicles used, problems faced, solutions to problems, output, impact and results of research and evaluation of the programme strategies.

Booklet 3 : lessons learned and guidelines. Bangkok: UNESCO PROAP, 1999. 18 p. (Communication and advocacy strategies: adolescent reproductive and sexual health; series one)

Series one covers Bangladesh, Iran, Malaysia, Mongolia, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Thailand

Based on the experiences elaborated in Booklet Two, this booklet draws the implications from them in terms of the lessons that have been learned, highlighting the factors which helped and hindered their successful implementation. Finally, from this wealth of knowledge also arose specific and practical guidelines for consideration by those who are formulating and implementing similar programmes especially as the guidelines deal with policy formulation, programme planning and management, forging alliances and winning support, using more effective strategies, audience segmentation and materials development, innovative approaches, emphasis on life skills and safe sex behaviour and measurement of impact and use of indicators of success.

State of the world 2000 : a Worldwatch Institute report on progress toward a sustainable society. New York: W.W. Norton, 2000. 276 p.

State of the World 2000 shines an intense light on the great challenge our civilization faces: how to use our political systems to manage the difficult and complex relationships between the global economy and the earth's ecosystems. The authors describes the building blocks of an alternative economy that will satisfy human needs while preserving the environment. And they look closely at how the explosive growth of the Internet has created a backbone for the rapid but inexpensive dissemination of information about environmental problems and solutions.

10 years of contraceptive social marketing in Pakistan : an assessment of management, outputs, effects, costs and cost-efficiency 1987-1996. Washington, D.C.: Research Division, Population Services International, 1997. 37 p. (Working paper; no. 7)

This report examines the evolution of management and organization of contraceptive social marketing (CMS) in Pakistan, showing how the change from implementation by a local commercial firm to implementation by a local social marketing firm in partnership with a US-based firm specializing in social marketing improved sustainability of the activities while improving relationships between stakeholders. Second, the report describes how an increase in contraceptive prices led to a large decline in demand among low-income users. Third, the report analyses ten-year output trends and shows that, among other thing, access to contraceptives increased from 7,000 to 30,000 outlets, condom users increased from 200,000 to 500,000, and consumption rose from 25 million to 71 million. Lessons learned in Pakistan may be helpful to CSM managers who are targeting poorer segments of the population and/or are trying to increase efficiency of their programmes.

Asia's population and family planning programmes : leaders in strategic communication. Asia-Pacific Population Journal. December, 1999. v. 14(4): pp. 73-90.

Asian countries led the world in identifying problems related to rapid population growth and high fertility and in developing programmes to address those issues. The region likewise took a leading role in developing strong information and communication programmes to inform, educate and persuade their people of the need to take action on a number of issues. This article identifies seven elements of strategic communication and gives examples of the impact they have had in the programmes of several countries in the region. It concludes by predicting that strategic communications will emphasize five areas in the future.

Profiles for family planning and reproductive health programs : 116 countries. Washington, D.C.: Futures Group International, 1999. 87, A.75, B.4, C.2 p.

The book provides statistical series and text analyzes that bear upon improved reproductive health and the alleviation of unwanted childbearing. 116 countries are covered: all of those with over a million population in the regions of Asia, Latin America, Sub-Saharan Africa, and North Africa/Middle East, as well as the five Central Asia Republics, Russia, Ukraine, and Moldova. It is consisted of 5 chapters. Chapter 1. provides an overview of the disparate geographic pattern of reproductive health problems. Chapter 2. uses over 220 national surveys to describe contraceptive use, including trends by method and source. Chapter 3. introduces a special projection method to anticipate future contraceptive use, again by method, with estimates of commodity needs. Chapter 4. summarizes demands on services due to growing population numbers, regarding safe motherhood services and the burdens of maternal mortality, abortion, and HIV/AIDS. Finally, Chapter 5. considers 4 action goals, including full access to contraception, satisfaction of unmet need and intention to use a method, achievement of the desired fertility level, and attainment of replacement fertility. A full set of appendix tables supports these various topics.

Understanding the prevalence of female sterilization in rural South India. Studies in Family Planning. December, 1999. v. 30(4): pp. 288-301.

By analyzing the practice of female sterilization in rural Andhra Pradesh, in southern India, this article examines the role culture plays in demographic research. It is based on 14 months of participant observation in three rural villages, a survey of 396 households, and unstructured interviews with 42 women and two men. It shows how demography and anthropology can be mutually supportive in their efforts to clarify population phenomena.

Contraceptive switching in Bangladesh. Studies in family planning. December, 1999. v. 30(4): pp. 315-328.

Bangladesh has experienced a substantial decline in fertility that has been achieved by means of a large increase in the use of modern methods of contraception. As contraceptive prevalence increases, aspects of contraceptive-use dynamics, including reasons for discontinuation and behaviour after discontinuation, become important influences on fertility. This report uses calendar data from the 1993-94 Bangladesh Demographic and Health Survey to examine contraceptive behaviour following discontinuation of modern-method use. The individual-level characteristics found to influence switching behaviour include the method used, method-related difficulties with previous contraceptive use, and education. A large amount of unexplained variation in switching rates remains, however, largely at the individual level, but also at the community level for certain types of transition.

Strategic planning : reflections on process and practice. Boston, MA: Management Sciences for Health, 1999. 116 p.

Lessons from MSH

This monograph reflects on the approaches and techniques that foster a participatory process as the foundation for developing a compelling strategic plan. Using six key lessons that have emerged out of MSH's practice, it emphasizes process dynamics, organizational culture, and the role of the facilitator in strategic planning. Ideas for action are presented to improve the quality of the collective reflection and to help gain broad-based commitment to implement the resulting plan. This monograph would be of interest to anyone about to begin a strategic planning process either as a facilitator or a participant, and those who are interested in knowing more about what to expect during and from a strategic planning process.

Promoting reproductive health : investing in health for development. Boulder, Colo.: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2000. 315 p.

The book contains case studies of six developing countries: Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Mexico, South Africa, and Tanzania; as well as two developed donor countries: the United Kingdom and the United States. The studies reviews progress made in advancing the reproductive health agenda of the ICPD Programme of Action, focusing on how each country acted on the endorsement of different elements of the reproductive health approach for which cost estimates are given in the Programme of Action: elements including family planning, reproductive health services, STD/HIV/AIDS prevention, and research, data collection, policy analysis, and formulation. Each author examines the state of policy and programme development and financing related to the implementation and sustainability of the reproductive health approach. Recommendations on key issues affecting financing, implementation, and sustainability of the reproductive health approach advanced at the ICPD.

Changing adolescents' beliefs about protective sexual behavior : the Botswana Tsa Banana Program. Washington, D.C.: Research Division, Population Services International, 1997. 41 p. (Working paper; no. 3)

This study examines the effect of the Tsa Banana adolescent reproductive health intervention (youth-oriented condom social marketing, peer sales educators, communications campaigns, and development of adolescent-friendly outlets) on beliefs about protective sexual behaviour. The study uses a quasi-experimental research design, comprised of a before and after survey in the intervention location and in a control location. The analysis provides strong evidence that in just 8 months the project had a positive impact on several health beliefs, including an increased awareness of the benefits of condom use and a reduction in important barriers to condom use.

The changing social environment for adolescents in the Kassena-Nankana District of Northern Ghana : implications for reproductive behavior. New York, 1998. 64, [2] p. (Working papers; no. 110)

This study reports on a primarily qualitative investigation of adolescent reproductive behaviour in the Kassena-Nankana District, Ghana. The social environment faced by adolescent boys and girls in this district and its links to reproductive behaviour are described. The principal question is whether in this remote, rural area, the environment has been altered in ways that have undermined traditional sexual and reproductive patterns.

The role of mass media practitioners in promoting adolescent reproductive and sexual health issues : module 1. Kuala Lumpur: Asian Institute for Development Communication, 1999. 27 p.

Paper presented at the Regional Workshop on Promoting Advocacy for Adolescent Reproductive and Sexual Health through Effective Communication: a Training Programme for Media Practitioners, Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 28 September 1999 - 1 October 1999.
Organised by Asian Institute for Development Communication with funding support from United Nations Population Fund.

The objective of this module is to enhance the role and capacity of mass media practitioners in advocating and promoting awareness on reproductive and sexual health among adolescents. It describes the existing situation in the reporting of adolescent reproductive health in the mass media. It identifies the needs and importance in increasing public interest in adolescent reproductive health issues. It identifies the various target groups for advocacy and identifies strategies to address the constraints within each target group. It also ensures quality coverage of reproductive health issues with an aim to influence the various target groups.

Learning to be opposite sex : sexuality education and sexual scripting in early adolescence. Sears, James T. Sexuality and the curriculum : the politics and practices of sexuality education. New York: Teachers College Press, [1999]. 89-105 p.

This chapter argues that the conventional sexual scripting that young adolescents receive in society needs to be directly challenged in schools. It calls upon educators to help young adolescents learn how they can become allies rather aliens to each other. Toward this goal, it first explores, through autobiographical analysis, ways in which the scripting affects the lives of real people. Next, it analyzes conventional sexual education materials, and then give a brief illustration of the type of curricular effort. Finally, it argues that sexuality education must be linked to broader social and political struggles for justice.

Planning and designing effective web sites. Cambridge, MA: Course Technology, 1998. 184 p. + 1 CD-ROM; 4 3/4 inch.

Accompanied with CD-ROM 0075

This book is intended to be a textbook for teaching budding web designers. It gives theory and examples on how to design an effective web site. The first part of the book gives a brief introduction to the web and the various roles of web site creators. It is introduced to describe the role of deciding what information should be included on a web site and how. Part two covers the process of generating ideas for web site content and contains a chapter on information decomposition and structuring. The principles of breaking information into useful chunks then relating them to each other are explained. Part three describes layout and design features that increase the effectiveness and efficiency of the site. Topics covered include text and linkage analysis and composition, and use of multimedia. The final part covers support and maintenance. Each chapter concludes with various exercise for students. A case study of designing a site is included, exemplifying each step or process. A CD-ROM is also included so that readers without Internet connections can still see the examples.

Guest, Philip.
Mobility transitions within a global system: migration in the ESCAP region. Asia-Pacific Population Journal. December, 1999. v. 14(4): pp. 57-72.

This article focuses on the context within which migration occurs in the ESCAP region. It covers the patterns of migration according to countries' stage in the demographic transition process and level of economic development. It points out that, although international migration is receiving increased attention, it is internal migration that makes up the vast majority of moves. Internal migration is characterized by a high proportion of temporary migrants, a significant proportion of whom are female, and people moving from rural to urban areas. The article also discusses urbanization and international migration as well as the impacts of these processes. It concludes with a number of predictions about the pattern of migration in the first quarter of the twentieth century, during which migration is expected to come to the forefront as a demographic, economic, social and political issue.

The "Asian miracle". Asia-Pacific Population Journal. December, 1999. v. 14(4): pp. 5-8.

Population is among the development issues that will be of global concern during the twenty-first century. This overview of the current situation and likely future trends introduces this thematic issue of the Asia-Pacific Population Journal, the last to be published in the current century. It states briefly what has been accomplished during the past 50 years and what remains to be done in the field of population and development. It concludes that, while Asia has made excellent progress, national governments and the donor community must do more if the region is to realize the vision behind the recommendations for further actions to fulfil the goals and objectives of the ICPD Programme of Action.

The demography of Asian ageing : past accomplishments and future challenges. Asia-Pacific Population Journal. December, 1999. v. 14(4): pp. 39-56.

While rapid population growth was the major demographic issue of public, political and scientific concern in much of Asia during the last half century, population ageing is poised to replace it as the major demographic preoccupation in the twenty-first century. In describing the situation in countries of the region, the article points out two major concerns for government policy makers: how to ensure adequate health care and adequate economic and social support for the elderly. The article outlines a number of issues for research and highlights the challenges for demographers in addressing the projected situation in the not-too-distant future.

Gender, labour markets and women's work. Liege, Belgium: International Union for the Scientific Study of Population, 1999. 33, [2] p. (Gender in population studies)

Series edited by Antonella Pinnelli.

This paper focuses on women's work activities, both in the recognized labour market and in the home, in developing and industrialized countries. It considers how gender-based norms and expectations operate to influence women's work behaviour, and the documentation of that behaviour and how this relates to demographic variables. After a brief introduction, the first section provides a theoretical overview of gender inequality in the labour market and highlights the role of demographic variables. The second section discusses the measurement and patterns of women's work in the labour force and in home production. Section 3 discusses the nature and degree of occupational segregation by sex throughout the world.

Women's labour market status in Fiji : Are they subjected to discrimination?. Suva, Fiji: UNFPA Country Support Team Office for the South Pacific, 2000. 37, [2] p. (Discussion paper; no. 23)

This paper compares the status of women with that of men in Fiji's formal sector labour market, using data collected from over 8,000 employees. This analysis examines gender differences in relative earnings and occupational status as well as the returns to various kinds of human resource endowments, such as education, job characteristics and tenure with employer. It is anticipated that the results will be of practice interest to planners and policy makers in both Fiji and other Pacific Island countries.

Gender and the family in developed countries. Liege, Belgium: International Union for the Scientific Study of Population, 1999. 44, [2] p. (Gender in population studies)

Series edited by Antonella Pinnelli.

This study concentrates on the relations between gender and family in developed countries. The first section contains a discussion of the theories important for analysis of the relations between gender and family. The second section contains a description of recent changes in family behaviour, which, in Section 3, are brought into relations with the changes in women's status and in gender differences from a macro point of view. In Section 4 the central theme of the study is tackled from a micro point of view, elaborating the individual data of the Fertility and Family Survey, a survey co-ordinated by the PAU-UNECE between 1989 and 1997 in 22 developed countries. In Section 5 covers gender resources as determinants of cohabitation, divorce or having a low rate of fertility. Lastly, in Section 6, the consequences on gender of the new patterns of family behaviour are presented.

Countdown to six billion [poster]. Washington, D.C.: ZPG Population Education Program, 1999. 1 poster : col. ; 91 x 46 cm. + manual.

Accompanied with "Countdown to six billion teaching kit", a supplement to this poster.

"Countdown to six billion" poster is prepared to help educators incorporate population education into their lessons. The nine topics on the face of the poster mirror the nine months of the school year. In each area, the students can work towards a sustainable society. On the back of this poster are several hands-on activities to bring these issues to life in the class. "Countdown to six billion teaching kit", a supplement to this poster, contains additional activities and resources for the secondary social sciences classroom.

No one can punish us for linking sex! [poster]. Chicago, IL: Coalition for Positive Sexuality, 1996. 1 poster : col. ; 46 x 61 cm.

The poster focuses on the youth's rights. They need to talk about their bodies and their lives. They may decide to have sex with a guy, or a girl, or both, or with themselves. Adults may not call them "adulteress" anymore, but they are still being treated like criminals. Politicians accuse single moms of "destroying the family". Schools refuse to teach them about birth control and safe sex. They will choose to have sex or not to have sex. They demand the right to be able to take care of themselves.

Peer education and HIV prevention [kit] : a simple guide to interactive working with young people using arts based techniques : a pack of three. London: Cultural Partnerships, 1995. 1 packet (3 videocassettes + 1 tape + 1 manual).

The pack contained VT 0146 v. 1-3, TAPE 0002, and book no. 613.951 D748p.

This "Pack of Three" is prepared for those who work with young people, ages 14-18, either in a formal or informal setting. The pack contains three videos, a sound cassette, a teaching manual, and a laminated HIV quiz for use in an educational setting. The videos (all on one cassette) and the audio cassette demonstrate how, from simple group activities, youth workers and teachers can put together an educational and entertaining performance, by young people for young people. The first video outlines the approach the authors take, which they refer to as "peer education". It raises central issues, and helps de-sensitize the subject matter. The second video shows the youth worker "how to do it" - simple drama techniques which create problematic situations relating to sex and drugs, that reflect the young people's reality. It also provides guidance on how young people can be assisted to produce a piece of theater through improvisation - that can then be adapted and enriched by the group. The third video gives examples of how other media, such as music, video, photography, and desktop publishing, can be used as tools for peer education. The one page quiz is designed to be used directly with young people. The manual presents the information from the videos in greater detail, and is suitable to take along to the young people's workshop where all these ideas will be implemented.

Pleased to be me! [videocassette] : self esteem and sexuality for 11-13 year olds / Meet Leanne, Jason and Jade. Auckland, New Zealand: Resource Unit, Family Planning Association, 1997. 1 videocassette; VHS/PAL; 23 mins 30 secs and 24 mins 30 secs (with breaks); sd., col.

Accompanied with booklet no. BO EPD/ARH 0022
The booklet is kept with the videocassete.

As Meet Leanne, Jason and Jade write the song called "Pleased to be me!", they talk about how they felt as they were growing up. They discuss about self esteem, peer pressure, relationships with parents; puberty; sexuality; and body image. It helps young people to feel they are not alone and gives an excellent starting point for discussion and classroom work on the issues that affect young people today. On the cassette there are two versions of the programme. The second version has breaks with titles; each section deals with an issue that can be discussed by the group. The accompanying teacher's guide gives suggestions for group work and extension activities.
